

The Daphne Jackson Trust

Training Courses for Daphne Jackson Fellows

The Trust 'in-house' courses are tailor-made for Daphne Jackson Fellows

Every Fellow should have attended each course by the completion of their fellowship.

Trust courses are day courses and can contribute to the 100 hours per year retraining fellowship requirements.

Travel to and from these courses may be claimed from the Extraordinary Expense account. Courses are designed and facilitated by professional trainers.

Course attendance is particularly beneficial for participants because of the opportunity to network with other fellows from different scientific backgrounds who are on a similar career path.

Four courses are run each year:

Work life balance

Research is just one of the things you do. This course will provide strategies to be more effective in your work; strategies to balance the demands of work with the other parts of your life and actions that can make a difference to your work and life

Presentation skills

Get your message across. Feel more confident. Connect with your audience. Make an impact so your audience wants to listen. Enliven your presentation. This course will show how to unpack a complicated idea and make it accessible.

Media and PR skills

The aim is to demystify the journalism process, explain what journalists want from scientists for different media as well as how to give a good radio interview and provide print quotes. All training will focus on presentation, communication skills and content, with an informal style so as to encourage confident and effective communication with journalists in the future.

Professional Skills

Get that job - Job searches, job applications, CV presentations
Get that funding - writing successful applications

Details of course dates and venues will be circulated to all fellows well in advance. Details can also be found on the Daphne Jackson Trust website.
